

“I HATE Annuities. And you should too.”

Ken Fisher
CEO, Fisher Investments
FISHER INVESTMENTS™

Let me tell you why... FREE Get 15-page Annuity Insights

Click Here for FREE Download Now

Dow Jones Reprints: This copy is for your personal, non-commercial use only. To order presentation-ready copies for distribution to your colleagues, clients or customers, use the Order Reprints tool at the bottom of any article or visit www.djreprints.com

- See a sample reprint in PDF format.
- Order a reprint of this article now

EXHIBIT

EXHIBIT

The Art of Propaganda

June 20, 2014 7:32 p.m. ET

Cincinnati Museum Center

During World War I, propaganda posters held unique power in mobilizing the public. Without the Internet, radio and television, they were one of the few ways to spread messages. A new online exhibit by the Cincinnati Museum Center (www.cincymuseum.org) showcases some of the museum's collection of more than 200 wartime posters. Though many of the placards were meant to sway public opinion, encouraging enlistment or support for the war effort, others were simply notices for events like fundraisers. "Propaganda isn't necessarily a bad thing," says curator Scott Gampfer. Other exhibits dedicated to World War I posters this year include one at the First Division Museum at Cantigny in Wheaton, Ill., and another at Boston's Museum of Fine Arts, opening on July 26.

—Alexandra Wolfe

Copyright 2014 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. All Rights Reserved

This copy is for your personal, non-commercial use only. Distribution and use of this material are governed by our Subscriber Agreement and by copyright law. For non-personal use or to order multiple copies, please contact Dow Jones Reprints at 1-800-843-0008 or visit www.djreprints.com